

Indigenous artists stage London sale for dialysis project

Posted Thu Jun 1, 2006 2:32pm AEST

The Papunya Tula Artists of the Western Desert in central Australia are holding an art exhibition and sale in London this month to raise money for a dialysis project in Alice Springs.

The Indigenous artists raised more than $1 million at a previous sale to launch the Western Desert Dialysis program which provides renal dialysis for patients from remote regions.

Paul Sweeney from Papunya Tula says the London sale will provide bridging money for the program until shared responsibility agreements are confirmed and deliver additional money.

"We're concentrating on the medium to large sort of works," he said.

"They're going to be pretty exy."

"We figure they can afford it so we've very carefully chosen 20 exemplary works by all the leading artists."

Tags: arts-and-entertainment, events, indigenous-aboriginal-and-torres-strait-islander, alice-springs-0870

© 2010 ABC